January 23, 2026 - March 8, 2026

Philadelphia, PA- Beginning in January, SEAMAAC and the American Swedish Historical Museum (ASHM) invite the Philadelphia community to join us for the exhibition Indivisible: Stories of Strength, an exhibition exploring identity and culture among native and immigrant Philadelphians. This exhibition will feature a video series, collaborative art pieces, and new artwork in collage, ceramics, and photography created by artists from SEAMAAC's art resiliency workshops led by artists Shira Walinsky, Marguerita Hagan, Eugenio Salas, Rena Fruchter, and Donna Backues. This is the second exhibition collaboration between ASHM and SEAMAAC, building on the Spring 2025 exhibition Through the Eyes of Philadelphia's New Americans: Art, Resilience, and Community.

Resilience, and Community.

SEAMAAC's video series for this exhibition will incorporate clips of interviews with new immigrants and descendants of immigrants who chose Philadelphia as their home. As attendees move through the exhibition and explore the artwork, they can listen and watch the interviews to deepen the artwork's impact and significance. The interviewees, who may or may not be one of the artists themselves, are fellow Philadelphians who will share their stories of their identity, culture, and lived experiences in Philadelphia, whether they are recent immigrants or 2nd, 3rd, and 4th generation descendants of immigrants. The full-length interviews will also be available online.

In addition to the video series, the exhibition will feature collaborative art pieces and new artwork created by artists from SEAMAAC's art resiliency workshops. Creating art within a community is a powerful act. It allows us to collectively envision a better future, build connections across diverse backgrounds, and cultivate empathy and understanding. SEAMAAC's resiliency art programming brings together people from around the world, offering them a space to learn new skills, create art, and connect on a personal level. Through this shared creative process, participants not only enjoy the act of making but also build meaningful relationships. Creativity becomes a bridge between cultures and experiences, ultimately fostering resilience and strengthening community bonds.

Indivisible: Stories of Strength will be on view at ASHM from January 23, 2026 to March 8, 2026. Admission is included with ASHM general admission tickets. ASHM is open Tuesday through Thursday 10:00 am – 4:00 pm and Friday through Sunday 10:00 - 6:00 pm.

Indivisible: Stories of Strength was curated by SEAMAAC.

Lead support for this project is provided by the

About SEAMAAC:

Founded in 1984 by Cambodian, Chinese, Laotian, Hmong, and Vietnamese refugees from Southeast Asia, SEAMAAC's founding vision was to unite Philadelphia's Southeast Asian communities into a dynamic refugee-led coalition. Over the last four decades, SEAMAAC expanded its services to other immigrants/refugees as well as to native-born Philadelphians of every race and ethnicity. Today, the organization works on local, regional, and national levels, united by a shared commitment to "Build Better Communities" and a mission to support and serve all communities as they seek to advance the condition of their lives in the United States. Their commitment to serving people regardless of race or national origins has inspired our mission and vision in building a stronger society based on the principles of justice and equity for all.

About ASHM:

Built in 1926 during the Sesquicentennial, the Museum has a unique interior divided into a dozen galleries designed to highlight Scandinavian influences in America.
